City of Hamilton Directory.

1856.

THE Publisher, in presenting this work to the public, deems it necessary to make a few explanatory remarks. Probably, there is no department of book-making in which errors are more likely to be made than in the compilation of a Directory—errors, too, which the public are generally unwilling to excuse. The obtaining of the names, with their profession and residence, and their alphabetical arrangement, is attended with far greater difficulty and more trouble than most people imagine; and, notwithstanding the greatest care has been taken, and the most strenuous exertions made to have the work correct, the Publisher will not be surprised if some few errors are discovered. But, he thinks, it is as perfect as a work of this description can be made under existing circumstances.

It would make a Directory much more valuable were the houses of the principal streets numbered, and, as there appears to be a universal desire on the part of business men that this should be done, it is highly probable that the present City Council will take the matter in hand. The Publisher will bring the subject before that body at an early day, and it is hoped that the houses will be numbered by the time a new Directory is required.

The Publisher trusts that his patrons will overlook imperfections which may be found in the present volume, and as it is his intention to continue the publication of the Directory as often as is thought desirable, he hopes to profit by the experience he has had, and be enabled to make many valuable improvements in succeeding issues.

HAMILTON, from its geographical position, its peculiar natural advantages, and through the indomitable energy and enterprise of its citizens, has, within the past few years, made rapid advances toward becoming the chief Commercial City in Canada.

But a few short years have passed away since the site on which now stands the crowded city, with its stately edifices and its elegant residences, its thronged streets, and its marts and factories teeming with life and business activity, was a dense forest, the hunting ground of the Indian, and the home of wild animals and beasts of prey. It was not many years ago that the waters of our beautiful harbor, which now bear upon their bosom magnificent steam-ships, and vessels of every grade, bringing to our port the treasures of other lands, and conveying to Eastern markets the products of the West, were calm and unruffled, save when the red man launched his bark upon the blue expanse, or when lashed into fury by the angry tempest.

Although, comparatively, the youngest of Canadian towns, it has outstripped many of the older and more favored places, and is now only second in importance to the capital of Canada. It is the principal wholesale mart of the Western Province; and if it progresses in the same ratio as in the past five years, it will soon leave in the distance even Toronto, and become what Nature has intended it to be, and what its enterprising citizens are determined to make it, the first of Canadian cities. Situated as Hamilton is, at the head of lake navigation, and in the very centre of the finest grain producing country in America, with Railways, completed and prospective, diverging in various directions through the best settled and wealthiest portions of the Province, it is destined to a mighty future.

Hamilton was laid out in the year 1813, but for many years it progressed but slowly, so that we find, in the year 1837, the inhabitants numbered only 3,567. From 1837 to 1841—four years—it made little or no progress. The census of the latter year reported a population of 3,446, showing a decrease in the four years of 121. During the succeeding four years, the population nearly doubled, and by the census of 1850 we find that the number of inhabitants had increased to 10,248. From that period to the present the City has progressed with almost unexampled rapidity. The commencement of the Great Western Railway gave an impetus to all kinds of business. New and substantial buildings took the place of those no longer sufficient for the increased amount of business. Our merchants and mechanics, who had accumulated ample fortunes, employed their surplus means in improving their property. New streets were opened, and handsome edifices sprung up as if by magic in all parts of the City. The population, which had reached 10,000 in 1850, has considerably more than doubled since that period—the estimated number of inhabitants at the present time being 25,000. Increasing in this ratio, we may safely assume that Hamilton in 1860 will number nearly 40,000 inhabitants.

It will be seen by the following that the amount of assessment of real and personal property during the past five years has more than trebled, and since 1852—three years—nearly doubled:

Valuation in 1848, . . .	£60,737	Valuation in 1852, . . .	£105,349
" 1849, . . .	60,317	" 1853, . . .	134,353
" 1850, . . .	61,574	" 1854, . . .	156,928
" 1851, . . .	94,259	" 1855, . . .	190,479

The custom duties on imports into the port of Hamilton for 1850 amounted to £59,000, in 1851 to £74,000, and in 1852 to £86,557. The total value of goods imported into the City for 1853 was £587,914, duties on which amounted to £86,656.*

* The Publisher would have been glad to have furnished the amount of imports and exports for the past two years in detail, but on application to the proper authorities was refused the information.
