PARK HILL,

an important and rapidly growing post village and station on the Grand Trunk Railway, 49 miles from London by rail, via St. Mary's, and 30 by the direct stage road. In 1861 this village was scarcely known, it is now the principal station between St. Mary's and Sarnia, and its trade is rapidly increasing in the exportation of timber, lumber, staves, tanbark and farm produce. No other village in North Middlesex seems to progress at the same ratio which this has done within the past few years. It contains two large flour and grist mills; a steam saw and planing mill and a woollen mill. Hugh C. Baird's foundry and agricultural implement manufactory gives employment to ten hands and turns out reapers, mowers, plows, cultivators and all the necessary and labor saving machines used on the farm. John Harrison's stave cutting machine is a desideratum much needed and is another means of converting material of little value into a merchantable article of commerce.

HOTELS.—There are four hotels. The Hastings House is kept by Sandford Tudor; the Vanwyck House carried on by John Vanwyck; the Victoria Hotel conducted by Thomas Powell, and Mott's Britannia Hotel, are not excelled by those of any village or town in this section of the country.

CHURCHES.—There are four churches, all handsome buildings and favorably located.

MILITARY.—The volunteer force of Park Hill is in a good state of efficiency. A. McKellar, captain.

NEWSPAPER.—The "Park Hill Gazette" has been established and is conducted by Wallace Graham, editor and proprietor.

MASONIC.—Doric Lodge, No. 233, holds its regular communication Tuesdays on or before full moon. John Dawson, W. M.
